Concurrent Workshop Session #4

Critical Elements of a Successful Restorative Justice Approach

Whether used in place of traditional school discipline or in place of traditional juvenile justice adjudication or transition processes, the success of any Restorative Justice approach or model hinges on our attention to five critical components. Participants will gain an understanding of these components and of the developmental neuroscience that underlies them. Tools and strategies for developing a restorative approach or for improving an existing model will be shared.

Presenters:

- Pender Makin, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, Brunswick School Department
- Page Nichols, Restorative Justice Specialist, The REAL School, Brunswick School Department

Preventing Unintentional Harm: Understanding Implicit Bias in Juvenile Justice

This workshop explores how implicit bias can influence decision-making and produce racial disparities within juvenile justice and education contexts. In addition, the workshop introduces a training developed by the Center for Policing Equity (CPE) that provides techniques to limit the impact of implicit bias on judgments and decisions. Overall, the workshop educates participants about how implicit bias can contribute to the school-to-prison pipeline, and introduces training and professional development tools that address this phenomenon.

Presenters:

- Nina Crane, Project Coordinator, Juvenile Justice and Education, The Center for Policing Equity
- Moderator, Nicole Johnson-Ahorlu, Director, Juvenile Justice and Education, The Center of Policing Equity
- Summer Robins, Associate Director, Juvenile Justice & Education, The Center for Policing Equity

Education Access and Advocacy: A Prevention and Reentry Strategy

School can be pipeline to prison or a path to prosperity, and advocacy can make the difference. This session will explore federal laws that protect students' rights to access, attend and succeed in school, with a focus on students in unstable housing, immigrants, parenting youth, and students with special needs. Through interactive lessons, participants will leave with new tools to advocate for access to school, services to succeed academically, and legislation to strengthen youths' rights.

Presenters:

- Patricia Julianelle, Director of Program Advancement and Legal Affairs, SchoolHouse Connection
- Brandy Sincyr, Policy Analyst, Columbia Legal Services

Whole Child, Whole City: Innovative City Models to Improve Health and Education Outcomes and Keep Young People Of the Juvenile Justice System

Many if not most young people involved in the juvenile justice system grow up in cities and towns. Juvenile justice agencies and cities that work together stand to reach new heights in supporting positive youth development and public safety. The National League of Cities (NLC) supports city leaders to build, align, and enhance health interventions, educational ecosystems, and law enforcement policies to ensure alignment among city systems that support young people.

Concurrent Workshop Session #5

A Toolkit for Legislative and System-Wide Engagement to Identify and Address DMC

Research has shown time and time again that minority youth are overrepresented within the systems that re intended to serve them. The juvenile justice system is no exception to this trend. This presentation will outline efforts made by the Administrative Office of the Courts Family and Juvenile Services (FJS) division to address disproportionality and disparity within the juvenile justice system through both agency system and legislative reform.

Presenters:

- Rachel Bingham, Executive Officer, Administrative Office of Courts
- Edward Palmer, Chair, Subcommittee for Equity and Justice for all Youth (SEJAY)

Full Community Collaboration in Service of System-Involved Youth

This session will explore the Family Partnerships Program in Larimer County, Colorado. The core purpose of this program is to work in partnership with the Court System to maintain delinquent youth with family, in their homes using a wide variety of creative community services to support their unique needs. This program is successful today because of the strong partnership between Juvenile Probation, The Department of Human Services, The District Attorney's Office and the Juvenile Magistrate.

Presenters:

- Hava Simmons, Social Casework Manager, Larimer County Department of Human Services
- Dixie Vogel, Juvenile Probation Supervisor, 8th Judicial District, Colorado

ESSA and Accountability for Educating Students in Juvenile Justice Facilities: Key Considerations

The new Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA) asks states to hold all institutions educating students accountable, including schools and programs within juvenile justice facilities. This session will discuss the accountability requirements of new law, highlight promising state examples, and present key considerations for states as they develop their accountability plans.

Presenters:

- Jenna Tomasello, Policy Associate, American Youth Policy Forum
- Emily Morgan, Senior Policy Analyst, Council of State Governments Justice Center
- Jennifer Brown Lerner, Deputy Director, American Youth Policy Forum

“Three Strikes,” Yikes! - Affecting Culture Change in Juvenile Probation

Across the country, hundreds of thousands of young people each year are placed on probation Supervision, and the outcomes have been inconsistent. There is no conclusive evidence that the traditional and still most prevalent approach to juvenile probation is an effective method for protecting public safety and improving outcomes for youth and families. Learn actionable ways to transform probation by: (1) developing a clear and convincing theory of change; (2) incorporating research and developmentally appropriate approaches to adolescent behavior modification; (3) focusing on incentives rather than sanctions; (4) eliminating racial inequities; and (5) empowering families and communities.
